

Standardised Roles and Recruitment (SR&R)

The SR&R Program is a coordinated Northern Territory Government recruitment approach for standardised roles across government. It allows candidates to submit one application and if suitable, be considered for multiple opportunities across participating agencies.

Why this is different?

One application

Apply once for a campaign.

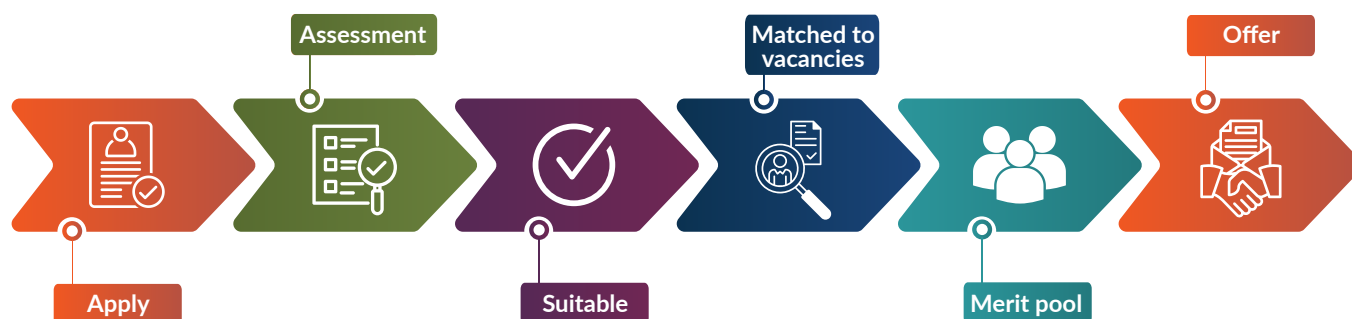

Multiple opportunities

Be considered for current and future identical vacancies.

Candidate care

Receive updates and ongoing communication throughout the process.

How it works?

Candidates assessed as suitable may be appointed to a current vacancy or placed in the SR&R merit pool for future identical opportunities. Please note that being assessed as suitable does not guarantee an appointment.

What you can expect from us?

Clear communication

Fair and merit-based assessment

Respectful candidate experience

Ongoing updates where possible

Privacy and professional handling of your information

Frequently asked questions

Can I be considered for more than one opportunity?

Yes. If you are assessed as suitable, you may be matched to more than one vacancy across participating agencies.

Can I decline an opportunity?

Yes. You can decide whether a particular role, location or agency is right for you.

What if my circumstances change?

You can update your availability or preferences during the process.

Do I need government experience?

Not necessarily. Transferable administrative and executive support experience is valued.

What happens next?

If you are interested in applying, review the role information carefully and follow the application instructions in the vacancy advertisement. The Specialised Recruitment team manages the campaign and will keep candidates informed throughout the process.
